This school is stepping up for Cincinnati’s poorest kids

Sharon Coolidge and Lis Durfor, Cincinnati Enquirer.
“These kids are hungry, in need of clothes and desperate for attention. They are the epicenter of our city’s reckoning.”

“Cincinnati has a child poverty rate of 53.1 percent, second only to Detroit's 59 percent child poverty rate, according to the 2012 American Community Survey. That means that, without help, every other child in this city doesn't have enough to eat, clothes to wear or a place to live.”

Group 1: Knowledge Avenue
What do you know about the impact of children growing up in poverty?

Group 2: Information Street
What do you need to know to better understand the impact of children growing up in poverty?

Group 3: Resource Avenue
What resources will you use to find information on the impact of children growing up in poverty?

Group 4: Information Street
What media sites will you use to find information on the impact of children growing up in poverty?

Sharon Coolidge and Lis Durfor, Cincinnati Enquirer.